In São Paulo millions of people take public transportation every day, spending an average of three hours on traffic to commute between home and work.

Every time someone waits for transport, they have to spend 20 minutes* without anything to do.

What to do with that time?

Well, while inside of a bus or subway, we are usually surrounded by so many people, it is easier to just do something in your phone or read a book by yourself but while and the bus stop waiting for the transportation, whatever task you perform should be fast and should not require too much attention as you already have to be attentive to see when the transportation comes. One already spends an average of 20 minutes waiting for the public system in São Paulo. Those 20 minutes become completely wasted time and filled with frivolous un-oriented tasks. Why not take that time and turn it into something more useful to the people into the city? Idea is too stimulate art knowledge thinking through simple game that can be easily played within those 20 minutes. Even if not finished, whatever is displayed can already be considered art. Whoever plays with it is not only have fun but making the city prettier and becomes an artist themselves, as every time someone plays, a new drawing and a new art piece come to life.
